Year in Review

ANNUAL REPORT
FISCAL YEAR 2017

Message from the President and Chairman

THE CHICAGO COUNCIL ON GLOBAL AFFAIRS is founded on the belief that America's engagement in the world is necessary and important—for our prosperity, our security, and our freedom. This mission is as important today as when the organization was established in 1922, at a time of growing isolationist sentiment.

As you will see throughout this report of our 2016–17 activities, there is an electric energy at the Council. Our 2016 survey of American public opinion informed last year's election dialogue about US global engagement. At the 2017 Chicago Forum on Global Cities, we examined how cities are pushing for open borders, open markets, open societies, and open minds as nationalist movements surge around the world. We convened cabinet secretaries, congressmen, and UN agency leadership for a task force report urging the United States to make global food and nutrition security a pillar of US diplomatic and national security engagement. And we continue to explore new ideas and solutions for other issues that transcend borders, such as immigration, trade, energy, and security.

Our new Conference Center provides you with a place to gather and connect with each other while learning about pressing global issues. With our new, cutting-edge technology, we are creating and delivering relevant, engaging, original content that draws from our insightful research and acclaimed events, and we are able to respond quickly to news cycles—in both traditional and social media environments. This transformation is key to our mission and to remaining relevant in today's constantly shifting technology and media landscapes.

Now marks a critical moment for the Council. To truly become the organization that you and others turn to for critical insights about the United States' role in the world, we must not only host thought-provoking speakers and produce insightful analyses on critical global issues but also develop new ways for audiences to learn and benefit from our content. Following a strategic review conducted this summer, we will explore new digital ways to bring the best in global affairs information to you; provide a valuable network for the next generation; and focus our energy on conducting outstanding research and convening leading global voices in such critical areas as global cities, global food security, and US foreign policy and public opinion.

AMERICA'S ENGAGEMENT IN THE WORLD IS NECESSARY AND IMPORTANT—
FOR OUR PROSPERITY, OUR SECURITY, AND OUR FREEDOM.

Our continued evolution and growth require extensive dialogue with global thought leaders and, most importantly, the mobilization of our broader community. The Chicago Council on Global Affairs has thrived for more than 95 years because individuals, foundations, and corporations generously support our work, and we continuously evaluate our achievements and identify opportunities to improve. With your active engagement and involvement, we will be well-positioned to expand our efforts even further as we look toward the Council's 100th anniversary in 2022.

Thank you,

Convening Leading Voices and Conducting Independent Research

OVER THE PAST YEAR, the Council facilitated critical dialogue and offered policy-relevant analyses and solutions on a range of global issues. By bringing together leaders in business, government, education, and the arts and conducting independent analysis and research, we explored solutions to global challenges and shaped policy debates.

THE 2016 ELECTIONS, POPULISM'S RISE, AND US GLOBAL ENGAGEMENT

As the Council opened its brand-new, state-of-the-art Conference Center in September 2016, Americans were facing a decision about how the United States should respond to an increasingly complex and uncertain international environment. The Council engaged opinion shapers and the public before and after the 2016 election in dialogue on US global engagement, and it explored diverse viewpoints on a range of critical issues, including: the humanitarian disaster in Syria, the global refugee crisis, immigration and national security, trade policies, rising extremism and terrorism, and the challenges posed by China, North Korea, and Russia. CNN's Fareed Zakaria discussed America's role as the world's policeman at the grand opening of our Conference Center.

Three days before the presidential debate on US foreign policy, we partnered with the Washington Post to release our 2016 Chicago Council Survey on US foreign policy. The data show that Americans as a whole continue to support our country's active role in the world—yet among a key slice of society, anxiety about shifting demographics and globalization has grown over time into a powerful political force. Council President Ivo Daalder and survey author Dina Smeltz discussed the findings with Wilson Center CEO Jane Harman, Hoover Institution Fellow Kori Schake, and the Washington Post's Jackson Diehl in Washington, DC. Hundreds of media outlets in addition to the Post cited the survey, including the Associated Press, CNN, The New York Times, Time, US News & World Report, and The Wall Street Journal.

In October 2016, US Secretary of State John Kerry referenced the survey during the Council's Louis B. Susman Lecture. He also told a sold-out audience of more than 1,500 that "International challenges can't be wished away; they can't be ignored. They have to be met with honesty and confidence. And that is the approach our country at its best has always taken." At a half-day symposium featuring John Judis, author of The Populist Explosion, and Chatham House Director Robin Niblett, scholars and experts put the year's political movements—from Brexit to Trumpism—into historical context and discussed the implications of the rise in populism for the established world order.

In early 2017, the Council on Global Affairs turned to examining whether democracy's "third wave"—the spectacular blossoming of open political systems after the Cold War—is receding. A panel of journalists debated if we are living in a "post-truth" era, and the Council on Foreign Relations' Richard Haass discussed a world in disarray. In April, American Enterprise Institute's Arthur Brooks, Brookings Institution's E. J. Dionne Jr., Politico's Susan Glasser, and others examined the retreat and renewal of global democracy.

GLOBAL ECONOMY, TRADE, AND BREXIT

In both the United States and Europe, there is anxiety that the effects of growing globalization, trade, and technological change are leaving the middle and lower classes at an economic disadvantage. This mounting populist sentiment drove the British vote to withdraw from the European Union (EU), proved to be too much for US-led trade deals such as the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), and is now influencing North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) renegotiations.

Throughout the year, our public programming examined the global political climate's effect on the US and global economies. Federal Reserve Governor Lael Brainard moved markets—both before and after her speech on the Council's stage—when she suggested the Fed should be in no hurry to raise interest rates. Her September 2016 talk drew more than 11,000 live-stream viewers from London, Shanghai, and Wall Street, and it was covered by ABC, Bloomberg, NPR, Reuters, The Wall Street Journal, and many others. We also hosted Federal Reserve representatives Robert Kaplan from Dallas and Loretta Mester from Cleveland.

Regarding Brexit, former Chancellor of the Exchequer George Osborne made news from the Council's stage when he warned British Prime Minister Theresa May against “take-it-or-leave-it bravado.” Former European Commissioner for Trade Lord Peter Mandelson spoke to a Council audience after the House of Commons and House of Lords cleared the way for Prime Minister May to trigger Article 50 and formally exit from the European Union. And just three days before the United Kingdom's snap election in June, which resulted in Prime Minister May losing majority control of Parliament, Ireland's Prime Minister Enda Kenny shared how the Irish government is tackling the challenges of Brexit.

As part of our Global Economy Series, we presented diverse perspectives from Harvard's Carmen Reinhart and Mohamed El-Erian of Allianz, as well as Austan Goolsbee and Douglas Holtz-Eakin, economic advisers to President Obama and President Bush, respectively. Our Growth Markets Series explored how the backlash against globalization and an inward-looking West has affected the low barriers and global supply chains that previously fueled growth of emerging markets.

The global economy also continues to be an important focus of Council research and analysis. Senior fellow Phil Levy launched a weekly column in Forbes, where he writes on the US trade agenda; trade policies of China, Germany, and others; and the impact of Brexit on the global economy. He also organized a conference of economic thought leaders to explore how to rebuild bipartisan support in the United States for international trade.

IMMIGRATION

Immigration poses a particular problem for the Midwest region of the United States. On the one hand, critical economic sectors throughout the region—especially manufacturing, agriculture, healthcare, and hospitality—rely heavily on immigrants for growth and prosperity. On the other hand, Trump’s wall-building message resonated across the Midwest, notably in those communities that have witnessed rapid demographic changes since the beginning of this century.

The Council’s research on immigration is increasingly relevant and shaping important policy debates. In October 2016, we released the findings of a study done in partnership with the Bipartisan Policy Center in Washington, DC. The report, Balancing Priorities: Immigration, National Security, and

THE COUNCIL’S RESEARCH ON IMMIGRATION IS INCREASINGLY RELEVANT AND SHAPING IMPORTANT POLICY DEBATES.

Public Safety, analyzes how the immigration system works to protect us from security threats and makes actionable recommendations for updating policies to simultaneously provide greater security and sustain the economic, cultural, and social benefits of immigration. In December, we shared five recommendations with policymakers for immigration policies to ensure a strong Midwest economy. And The Wall Street Journal published the Council’s research and data that reaffirm immigration offsets population decline and an aging workforce in Midwest metropolitan areas.

To engage and inform the public on this important issue, we created three digital interactives —on sanctuary cities, H-1B visas, and refugee resettlement in the United States. Events throughout the year featured voices on immigration policy from local, state, and national officials. Speakers included former Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff, Oxford Professor Paul Collier, Muslim Public Affairs Council President Salam Al-Marayati, UN High Commissioner of Refugees Assistant Protections Officer Katie Tobin, and National Immigration Forum Executive Director Ali Noorani. Our 2017 Chicago Forum on Global Cities opened with a conversation on open cities versus closed borders, and another panel examined how cities are solving challenges associated with global migration and an influx of refugees.

CITIES AS THE VANGUARDS OF OPENNESS

At the 2017 Chicago Forum on Global Cities, we explored how cities—pushing for open borders, open markets, open societies, and open minds—remain the vanguards of openness and the champions of globalization in the face of nationalist movements around the world. Hosted again in partnership with the Financial Times, this unique international event convened thought leaders such as Carl Bildt, Helen Clark, Valerie Jarrett, Martin Kimani, Martin Wolf, and current and former mayors of Busan, Cape Town, Dublin, Rio, and Toronto.

More than 600 participants from 36 countries attended the June event, including 54 speakers and leaders from 23 international partner organizations. Five solution workshops covered the foreign policy of cities, innovation and data, public-private partnerships, security, and technology and inclusive growth.

Once the global gatekeepers, national governments are now seen as obstacles by many local leaders attempting to connect with the rest of the world. In response, cities are developing what can best be described as their own global policies and agendas. The Council is pioneering this effort. At the Forum, we released Chicago's Global Strategy, a report that asks business, civic, cultural, and educational leaders to work together on an explicit strategy to advance Chicago's interests and build a global mind-set among all Chicagoans.

Throughout the year, the Council gathered leaders from global cities to share ideas and best practices on specific topics and pressing concerns. In September 2016, London Mayor Sadiq Khan delivered a keynote address from the Council's platform on his first official visit to the United States. Khan, who made history by becoming the first mayor of Muslim faith to lead a major Western capital, made an impassioned plea for social integration as the best way to address the challenges facing global cities and communities in this age of globalization. We helped organize the Mayors' Forum on Urban Waterways, which was cohosted in Chicago by Mayor Rahm Emanuel and Paris Mayor Anne Hidalgo. Eighteen mayors also participated in our roundtable, "Financing the Global City," hosted by Emanuel on the sidelines of the 2017 Chicago Forum. We also brought business, civic, educational, and cultural leaders together at small, private dinners in Hong Kong, London, Mexico City, New York, and Singapore.

The Chicago Council on Global Affairs has built upon three years of successful Chicago Forums to expand its global cities research team of fellows and nonresident fellows from around the world. Senior global cities fellow Karen Weigert is examining the implications of large cities' rapid growth around the world between now and 2025, as well as how the electric power needs of those cities can be met without disastrous increases in carbon emissions. And nonresident fellows Ian Klaus and Noah Toly are developing a City Diplomacy Index to analyze the ways cities advance their policy interests by participating in global networks and activities.

THE TRANSATLANTIC ALLIANCE AND US-RUSSIA RELATIONS

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) today remains an essential tool in advancing both American and transatlantic interests. The challenge is ensuring the trust that underpins the alliance is not unraveled by mixed messages and uncertainty coming out of Washington. Donald Trump entered office determined to improve relations with Russia and insisted NATO allies meet their defense spending obligations.

“For decades, the Republican Party has been more hawkish toward Russia than Democrats,” wrote Council senior fellow Dina Smeltz in a Washington Post commentary, but “that’s changed with President Trump’s election.” Smeltz reviewed US opinion polling on Russia and found that just 15 percent of Republicans agree that Trump is being too friendly toward Russia.

In the wake of the Kremlin’s unprecedented interference in the US presidential election, and at the start of the new administration’s efforts to build a more collaborative relationship with Moscow, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and the Chicago Council on Global Affairs released the findings of a high-level bipartisan task force on US policy toward Eurasia, Russia, and Ukraine, cochaired by former Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage and US Senator Chris Murphy. The paper, released in February, offers a set of principles to guide a sustainable policy toward the entire region.

In March, former US Ambassador to NATO Ivo Daalder, president of the Chicago Council on Global Affairs; former US Ambassador to Ukraine John E. Herbst; and Samuel Charap of the International Institute for Strategic Studies discussed the Trump administration’s approach to a resurgent Russia and the possible impact on NATO. Later, in a Twitter thread response to a President Trump tweet, Daalder explained how NATO and defense spending works. The Council also produced a digital interactive on NATO defense spending and released it in advance of Trump’s first NATO meeting in May.

At the NATO meeting, Trump’s alliance counterparts undoubtedly expected him to “repeat his insistence that they spend more on defense,” wrote Daalder for CNN. But they were surprised by his unwillingness to confirm his “unconditional commitment to the core precept of collective defense.” Daalder underscored the value of collective defense in a Financial Times op-ed and in discussions on Charlie Rose and MSNBC’s All In with Chris Hayes.

US FOREIGN POLICY IN THE MIDDLE EAST

The Middle East remains at the center of US foreign policy. American intervention in the region, however, has posed a far riskier undertaking in the years since the Arab Spring. Intensifying sectarian conflict, eroding state structures, and the growing influence of nonstate actors and regional powers leave the Trump administration with few easy policy options.

The Syrian civil war has become one of the worst humanitarian crises of the modern era. The 2016 Chicago Council Survey found a majority of Americans favored limited military intervention against extremist targets in the conflict, with a large majority favoring the use of airstrikes. We held several public events focused on Syria and other Middle Eastern countries important to US foreign policy such as Iran, Israel, and Turkey. Notable speakers included Adel-al Jubeir, the foreign minister of Saudi Arabia; Wendy Sherman, the former leader of the US negotiation team for the Iran nuclear deal; and Moshe Ya'alon, the former Israeli defense minister. Interviews of Jubeir and Ya'alon recorded for a Council video series received thousands of views via social media.

COUNCIL VISITING FELLOW SAEID GOLKAR HERALDED THE IRANIAN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION AS “THE MOST IMPORTANT IN THE HISTORY OF IRAN.”

In May, Council visiting fellow Saeid Golkar heralded the Iranian presidential election as “the most important in the history of Iran.” Golkar, whose work centers on Iranian politics and the military, wrote for Al-Jazeera and RealClearWorld about the election in the weeks prior, commenting on the candidates’ positions and the Iranian political system. Golkar also discussed Hassan Rouhani’s victory with Council leadership members, explaining implications of the win by the incumbent candidate who is most in favor of stabilizing Iran’s relationship with the United States.

Following President Trump’s visit to Saudi Arabia this spring, Council fellows Richard Longworth, Cécile Shea, and Karen Weigert addressed the administration’s diplomatic relationship with our Middle Eastern allies on the Council’s Deep Dish podcast. Shea gave Trump’s visit to Saudi Arabia a passing grade, saying, “I think someone near the president clearly has a fairly sophisticated idea of what it is going to take to bring peace to Israel and Palestine. If [Trump] can achieve Saudi Arabia’s backing to a peace accord, Hamas will have to accept it.”

THE NEW ASIAN SECURITY LANDSCAPE

President Trump said former US President Obama warned him of a “big problem” before he left office—North Korea. China’s military expansion in the South China Sea and rising economic influence command increasing attention, but Japan, North Korea, and other regional actors are shifting power beneath the surface. In February, the Council welcomed former US Director of National Intelligence Dennis Blair and Japan Institute of International Affairs President Yoshiji Nogami for a half-day symposium on Asian security. They and other experts examined what lies ahead for Asian security under the Trump administration.

In 2016, the Council on Global Affairs conducted a multinational public opinion survey in partnership with five organizations in Australia, Canada, China, Japan, and South Korea. The findings showed publics in the Asia-Pacific widely view the United States as the strongest military power in the region, though they are split over whether China or the United States is the premier economic power. The survey also found that Americans and Japanese have mutually favorable views of one another, share common perspectives of threats in the region, and support one another’s leadership efforts in the Asia-Pacific.

As Chinese President Xi Jinping visited the United States and met with President Trump in April, Council fellows Karl Friedhoff and Phil Levy previewed the pressing issues of economic relations and ever-aggressive North Korea during an episode of the Council’s Deep Dish podcast. Later that month, after Vice President Mike Pence said “the era of strategic patience is over” when visiting the demilitarized zone between North and South Korea, Cécile Shea, our nonresident senior fellow for global security and diplomacy, explained in a video the risks involved in the United States taking unilateral action in North Korea.

In May, Gideon Rachman, chief foreign affairs columnist for the Financial Times, explored how the growing wealth of Asian nations—or easternization—is transforming the global balance of power. While often portrayed as a threat to American jobs and security, he pondered an alternative to this zero-sum assessment of US-Asia relations. The Council also welcomed six US ambassadors to the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) to discuss the United States’ role in the region after President Trump’s withdrawal from the TPP.

GLOBAL FOOD SECURITY FOR PEACE AND PROSPERITY

In January, the Famine Early Warning Systems Network—one of the world’s leading authorities on famine—declared 70 million people across 45 countries would need food assistance this year, and the United Nations declared this famine the worst humanitarian crisis the world has faced since World War II. A lack of adequate food tends to create cycles of instability. In March, the Council published a bipartisan task force report, Stability in the 21st Century: Global Food Security for Peace and Prosperity. Former cabinet secretaries, congressman, and UN agency heads such as Catherine Bertini, Tom Daschle, Janet Napolitano, Ann Veneman, and Rajiv Shah were members of the task force.

The report, which calls on the United States to make global food and nutrition security a pillar of US diplomatic and national security engagement, was released at our 2017 Global Food Security Symposium in Washington, DC. Prominent speakers included US Senator Jerry Moran, African Union Special Envoy for Women, Peace, and Security Bineta Diop, and Syngenta Global Head of Corporate Affairs Mark Titterington. More than 500 leaders from academia, business, civil society, and government attended to discuss the report and explore how the United States benefits from a food-secure world that is, in turn, more prosperous, safer, and healthier. An additional 700 people from 44 countries live streamed the symposium.

This past year, the Council’s Global Food and Agriculture Program Director Alesha Black participated in a German-led G20 advisory group on the future of the rural world, and senior fellow Roger Thurow spoke at more than 100 public engagements. He also collaborated with the Pulitzer Center on Crisis Reporting on a three-part podcast examining nutrition, hunger, and food security around the world.

Worldwide peace and prosperity also depend on the cultivation of healthy populations. The Council’s 2017 Global Health Symposium explored the power of innovation and storytelling to spark social change, create global impact, and improve the lives of women and children. More than 500 people attended the March event, and another 350 from 19 countries watched the live stream. They heard from dynamic leaders and key innovators such as Amani Al-Khatahtbeh, founder and editor in chief of MuslimGirl.com, and Alice Albright and Mary Davis, CEOs from the Global Partnership for Education and the Special Olympics, respectively.

Engaging the Public and Opinion Shapers

The Council on Global Affairs is committed to broadening the discourse on global issues and providing a platform for the public, and especially the next generation, to engage directly with opinion shapers, world leaders, policymakers, business executives, journalists, and other leading policy experts.

POSITIONING THE NEXT GENERATION TO TAKE A GLOBAL LEADERSHIP ROLE

We elevated the voice of our Next Generation constituents this year and raised the bar on their participation and engagement in new and exciting ways. Reflective of our members—40 percent of whom are under the age of 40—the Council is committed to expanding the range and depth of activities and content designed to appeal to them and prioritizing the next generation in everything we do. To give them a voice in the Council's governance, we have created a Next Generation Committee on the Council's board of directors and also added Next Generation representatives to our other board committees.

The Emerging Leaders class of 2017 included 20 leaders across the public and private sectors, from companies and organizations such as the American Civil Liberties Union, Boeing Company, Chicago Public Schools, and Jones Lang LaSalle. They met as a class twice each month with experts to examine key issues that affect the world and have an impact on the global city of Chicago such as energy, the environment, the global economy, and international diplomacy. They also traveled with Council President Ivo Daalder to Washington, DC, for meetings with top officials and opinion shapers, including former Director of National Intelligence and US Air Force Lieutenant General James Clapper, former National Security Adviser Susan Rice, and Washington Post editor Marty Baron.

We also continued efforts to strengthen our Young Professionals (YP) Network, which truly is the lifeblood and future of the Council. While exploring ways to recruit new members to join our YP Network, we have maintained a stellar standing throughout the city, and the program is recognized as one of the go-to professional networks for 20- to 40- year-olds in Chicago. Attendance at YP events grew this year; for example, more than 200 members attended a February YP event on sustainable travel. Fundraising also is a growing aspect of the YP Network, which garnered its first underwriting support from a corporate partner this year and successfully raised close to $30,000 in support of the YP Pub Quiz, a signature YP event.

The Koldyke Global Teachers Program, generously supported by Pat and Mike Koldyke, seeks to increase the global competency of the selected teachers, expand the global citizenship of their school communities, and share best practices and key experiences among Chicago's high school educators. The Council selected the second cohort of five teachers to receive access to Council events and a $5,000 stipend each, which they used to undertake an independent, international travel and study experience during the summer of 2017. The teachers will share their findings on their travels and engagement with the Council at a public Council program in the spring of 2018.

CONNECTING LOCALLY, NATIONALLY, AND GLOBALLY

Our vision for, and investment in, strategic communications capabilities continues to produce rising returns for the Council. By strategically developing and disseminating original digital content, we are greatly raising the visibility, extending the reach, and promoting the relevance of the Council and its portfolio of work. Today's political environment and global dynamics have created an increased demand from the globally engaged public and opinion shapers for timely information and insights about the world. The Council on Global Affairs is responding to this demand by drawing on a range of information sources. Throughout 2016–17, we focused on building awareness through digital content that could reach, and ultimately engage, a wider audience.

These digital products include:

Deep Dish. This weekly podcast with Vice President of Studies Brian Hanson features outside as well as Council experts and speakers as guests on topics such as Brexit, Iran's election, North Korea, and Trump's National Security Council. The Deep Dish audience has grown since its launch in October 2016 to around 1,000 listeners per episode.

One More Question. In quick two- to three-minute video interviews, select well-known, high-level speakers appearing on the Council's programs' platform cover content that didn't make it into the event discussion. The 20 videos we have produced so far have drawn audiences from 16 countries.

Live-Streaming Video. We are now live streaming all public events hosted in the Council's Conference Center. We have prioritized increasing our virtual audiences and are exploring live stream-only events. The 104 events we live streamed this program season attracted more than 20,000 views and engaged audiences in 145 countries.

Multifaceted Videos. We use short, original videos to promote signature events, highlight the Council brand, and explain the main points of an issue as well as Council reports and studies. This year's promotional video on the Chicago Forum on Global Cities, for example, resulted in more than 33,000 views.

You Should Know. These image-based interactives and case studies use 15 to 20 images with a one- or two-sentence fact or insight (about the length of a tweet) per image to provide a quick summary of a topic in the news. Of the eight we produced this year, our two most popular explained sanctuary cities, generating more than 5,100 views, and the Paris Climate Agreement, generating more than 4,000 views.

This Week's Reads. Each week, Council President Ivo Daalder shares his thoughts on 10 news and commentary pieces. The themed summaries include content from publications around the globe and provide context on the week's most important stories. Readership has more than tripled since its launch in December 2015.

Global Insight. The Council's central blog offers an opportunity for authors, ranging from our invited program guests to our nonresident fellows to Council experts and staff, to write approximately 800 words of commentary or analysis on newsworthy and relevant global affairs topics. A post by British politician George Osborne about the Brexit process attracted more than 6,000 people to our site.

The Council's media trajectory reached new heights this past year, reflecting both the urgency of global affairs and the growing influence of the Council. Thanks to our newly built in-house production studio, television news stations including BBC, Bloomberg, CBC, CNN, FOX, and MSNBC gained quick and easy access to insights from Council experts. The studio also helped our media team to elevate the Council's profile via podcasts. In addition to launching the Council's signature podcast, Deep Dish, the studio enabled Council experts to be guests on popular podcasts such as Can He Do That? from the Washington Post and Pod Save the World from Crooked Media.

The Council's presence in online and print media also continued to flourish. Council experts, reports, and events were frequently cited in all major top-tier outlets, including Al Jazeera, The Atlantic, BBC, CNN, Financial Times, The Guardian, The New York Times, Politico, Wall Street Journal, the Washington Post, USA Today, and Vox. Our partnership with the Washington Post for the 2016 Chicago Council Survey was particularly valuable, generating extensive and exclusive media coverage on several of our survey briefs and sparking inquiries from other media outlets that enhanced the overall visibility and reach of both the Council and our leading survey work.

Strengthening the Financial Foundation

In the fall of 2014, the board approved an ambitious fundraising strategy that is currently being implemented by the development team in partnership with the board of directors. The three main objectives of this plan are to maximize the current donor base, expand the Council's reach by bringing in new members and donors, and launch a campaign to provide transformational funding.

Under the development team's new leadership, headed by Anna Edwards, the shift and revamping of the Council's fundraising strategy has started to become a reality. In fiscal year 2017, corporations provided $5.58 million in total support, individuals provided $5.23 million, and foundations provided $2.97 million.

IN FISCAL YEAR 2017, CORPORATIONS PROVIDED $5.58 MILLION IN TOTAL SUPPORT, INDIVIDUALS PROVIDED $5.23 MILLION, AND FOUNDATIONS PROVIDED $2.97 MILLION.

This year's Global Leadership Awards Dinner, our annual fundraiser, was one of the most successful in the history of the Council, bringing in more than $1.8 million. During the dinner, we honored Michael Moskow and Penny Pritzker for their local and global leadership, and the outpouring of support for the evening was due in large part to our cochairs Bill Daley, Craig Duchossois, and Leah Zell as well as dinner hosts John and Mary Manley.

The Council's mission-critical work in 2016–17 was enabled in significant part due to generous support from various foundations. New foundation support this past year came from the Carnegie Corporation of New York, Charles Koch Foundation, and Lumina Foundation for Education, Inc. The Council is committed to expanding and diversifying its foundation support for fiscal year 2018 and beyond.

Chicago's corporate community also provides critical support for the Council's work, and for the first time, this year we successfully confirmed corporate multiyear support, with $1,000,000 already pledged for fiscal year 2018 and $600,000 pledged for fiscal year 2019. Establishing this bedrock for future fiscal-year support not only guarantees important revenue, it also provides the space and opportunity for us to focus on forging new relationships.

This support makes it possible for the Council on Global Affairs to create engaging original content that informs and influences policy debates about critical global issues and US engagement in the world. To complete the Council's transformation as we approach our 100th birthday in 2022, there is more work to be done. We are assessing a potential upcoming campaign for the Council. Success will require extensive dialogue with our board of directors and top funders and, crucially, the mobilization of our broader community. More than 60 leaders were interviewed as part of a study to help us plan for the coming campaign. These candid perspectives on the Council are essential in shaping our strategy and overall future. ■

The first part of the paper discusses the importance of understanding the local context in which a project is implemented. This includes a thorough analysis of the social, economic, and cultural factors that may influence the success or failure of the intervention. It is essential to engage with local stakeholders from the outset to ensure that the project is relevant and sustainable.

The second part of the paper explores the challenges of implementing evidence-based practices in a resource-poor setting. Limited access to funding, infrastructure, and skilled personnel can significantly hinder the effectiveness of many interventions. However, innovative approaches to resource allocation and community mobilization can help overcome these barriers.

The third part of the paper presents a case study of a community-based health promotion program. This program focused on improving maternal and child health outcomes through a combination of education, counseling, and the provision of essential services. The program was designed to be culturally appropriate and to involve local health workers and community leaders.

The fourth part of the paper discusses the importance of monitoring and evaluation in assessing the impact of the intervention. This involves the collection and analysis of data to measure changes in knowledge, attitudes, and behaviors, as well as health outcomes. Regular evaluation allows for the identification of strengths and weaknesses and the making of necessary adjustments.

The fifth part of the paper concludes by highlighting the key lessons learned from the case study and the broader implications for public health practice. It emphasizes the need for a holistic approach that considers the complex interplay of various factors and the importance of ongoing collaboration and learning.
